

Car seat test from October 2019 by Stiftung Warentest, ADAC, ÖAMTC and TCS names Swandoo's Albert double test winner and best of the year!

Vienna, October 25th 2019

The Swandoo Albert baby car seat secures not just 1, but 2 impressive test wins, an incredible achievement for a small and dedicated team who is striving to disrupt the market.

The fall 2019 test carried out by the top consumer rating associations Stiftung Warentest, ADAC, ÖAMTC and TCS, gave Albert i-Size an impressive test debut. Albert came first in its category with a score of 1,6 in the i-Size version with base, and a score of 1,7 with a belted installation. This represents a real achievement for both the young brand and the product category.

Albert being installed in the vehicle with the base wins the 3rd best score ever obtained since the implementation of the new test protocol in 2015, becoming an award-winning icon in both safety and design.

According to Florian Königswenger, Senior Engineer R&D at Swandoo:

“We love the challenge of simplifying the product while improving safety to the next level. It is very exciting for us and requires a lot of attention to every single detail.”

Hitting the right notes with the brand philosophy, and giving a great validation to the Swandoo team, Nicolas Gonzalez-Garrido, Chief Designer, stresses:

“As parents who develop products for our own children, this award recognizes the quality of the work we do, with so much love, care, and dedication. As a small team, it is very humbling and motivates us to continue working in more solutions to help other families, like ours, to achieve a better and more joyful lifestyle.”
